

The image shows a vertical strip of a data table. The table has a header row with several columns, likely representing different categories or metrics. The data rows are organized into groups, with each group starting by a yellow horizontal line. Within each group, there are several rows of data. The right side of the table features a column with red horizontal lines, possibly indicating a final value or a specific status for each group. The overall appearance is that of a detailed report or a data log.
